

Parents satisfied with government schools, reveals ASSOCHAM survey

Survey was conducted during summer break in May-June

STAFF REPORTER
NEW DELHI

Parents are satisfied with improvements in facilities and teaching methods in government-run schools, reveals a survey conducted by the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (ASSOCHAM).

They feel that other schools in the National Capital Region (NCR) must emulate the model of Delhi government-run schools, the study further said.

ASSOCHAM interacted through digital media and social networking sites with around 3,250 parents in districts under NCR (apart from NCT of Delhi). The survey was conducted during summer holidays in May-June.

'Quality education'

Releasing the findings, ASSOCHAM secretary general D.S. Rawat said, "A lot is being done in the education sector both at the Centre and State levels. With Delhi government providing state-of-the-art facilities, improving infrastructure and quality of education, other States must follow suit to help shape a bright future for our children."

"Some of those interviewed said that their relatives in Delhi have either recently moved their children or are thinking to get them admitted to State-run schools from private institutions," the survey said.

Many said that through media reports and views of their relatives, they have learnt about Delhi government model of schools that have undergone a metamorphosis, added the report.

Parents satisfied with improvement in govt-run schools: ASSOCHAM survey

PTI
NEW DELHI, 9 JULY

Schools in the National Capital Region (NCR) must emulate the model of Delhi government-run schools in terms of making much-needed improvements to facilities and teaching methods, noted a parents' satisfaction survey conducted by ASSOCHAM.

The state governments of Haryana, Uttar Pradesh (UP) and Rajasthan having thirteen, seven and two districts that, along with NCT of Delhi, make up the NCR, must take a cue from Delhi government and allocate large chunk of their budget to education, according to the survey conducted by the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (ASSOCHAM) and Social Development Foundation (ASDF).

The industry body interacted with about 3,250 parents in districts falling in NCR whose children are studying in local government schools.

The survey was conducted during summer holidays in May-June to ascertain the views of people in general about their level of satisfaction in government schools of their respective districts.

"Almost all the parents were of the view that Delhi government is doing a commendable job for bringing overall improvement in the school education as every parent wants schools with good amount of facilities in their own area.

"Many of them said that through various media reports and views of their relatives and known people they have learnt about Delhi government model of schools that have undergone a metamorphosis of late," the survey said. Releasing the findings of the survey, ASSOCHAM secretary general D S Rawat said, A lot is being done in the education sector both at the Centre and state government levels in Delhi. With Delhi government providing state-of-the-art facilities, improving infrastructure and quality of education, other state governments must follow suit to help shape a bright future for our children.

Improvement needed in govt-run schools: Survey

Schools of NCR must take cue from Delhi, says industry body

AGE CORRESPONDENT
NEW DELHI, JULY 9

Schools in the National Capital Region (NCR) must emulate the model of Delhi government-run schools in terms of making much-needed improvement to facilities and teaching methods, observed a parents' satisfaction survey conducted by Assocham.

"The state governments of Haryana, Uttar Pradesh (UP), and Rajasthan having 13, seven and two districts that, along with NCT of Delhi, make up the NCR, must take a cue from the Delhi government and allocate a large chunk of their budget to education sector," according to the survey conducted by the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (Assocham) and Social Development Foundation.

► Haryana, UP and Rajasthan govts with 13, seven and two districts, must take a cue from Delhi and allocate a large funds to education

The industry body interacted with 3,250 parents in districts falling in NCR whose children are studying in local government schools. The survey was conducted during May and June to ascertain the views of people in general about their level of satisfaction in government schools of their respective districts.

"Almost all the parents were of the view that Delhi government is doing a commendable job for bringing overall improvement in the school education as every parent wants schools with good amount of facilities in their own area. Many of them said that through various media reports and views of their relatives and known people they have come to know about the Delhi government model of schools that have undergone a metamorphosis," the survey said.

Releasing the survey's findings, Assocham secretary general D.S. Rawat said, "A lot is being done in education at the Centre and state government levels. With Delhi government providing state-of-the-art facilities, improving infrastructure and quality of education, other states must follow suit to help shape a bright future for our children."

The parents were also asked how satisfied they were with the school their ward/s attended, including school teachers, academic standards, order, discipline, and the way school staff interacted with parents.

"Many respondents said there were many areas that needed improvement. Some said proactive approach was needed to ensure wholesome development of children."

Govt schools in NCR must follow Delhi Govt schools: Survey

STAFF REPORTER ■ NEW DELHI

When it comes to infrastructure, facilities and teaching methodology, Delhi Government schools are considered much better than their counterparts in the National Capital Region (NCR). A survey conducted by Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry of India (ASSOCHAM) among parents noted that Government schools in NCR must follow the model of Delhi Government schools in terms of making much needed improvements to facilities and teaching methods.

"I am glad that parents are happy with improvement in Govt schools. Our endeavour is that poor kids also shud get quality education. Only then our country will develop," Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal tweeted. The "parent's satisfaction survey" conducted jointly by ASSOCHAM and Social Development Foundation (ASDF) whereby 3250 parents of students studying in local government schools falling in NCR emphasizes that governments of other state must emulate the model of Delhi government run schools and should invest a big proportion of their budget on education. As per the survey, "The state governments of Haryana, Uttar Pradesh (UP) and Rajasthan having thirteen, seven and two districts that, along with NCT of Delhi, make up the NCR, must take a cue from Delhi government and allocate large chunk of their budget to education." The survey was conducted during summer holidays in May-June to ascertain the views of people in general about their level of satisfaction in government schools of their respective districts.

"Almost all the parents were of the view that Delhi government is doing a commendable job for bringing overall improvement in the school education as every parent wants schools with good amount of facilities in their own area. During the survey parents were also asked about how satisfied they were with various aspects of the school their child currently attended, including the school overall, the teachers, academic standards, order and discipline, facilities and the way the school staff interacted with parents.

"Many of them said that through various media reports and views of their relatives and known people they have learnt about Delhi government model of schools that have undergone a metamorphosis of late," said the survey.

Releasing the findings of the survey, ASSOCHAM secretary general D S Rawat said, "A lot is being done in the education sector both at the Centre and state government levels in Delhi. With Delhi government providing state-of-the-art facilities, improving infrastructure and quality of education, other state governments must follow suit to help shape a bright future for our children."

"Majority of respondents in all the districts said there were many areas that need to be improved. Some said that proactive approach was needed to ensure wholesome development of children, equal focus on education and extracurricular activities, conducting classes in creative writing, dance, theatre, fine arts and other such subjects by hiring specialised teachers," said the survey report.

